Summary Information

Repository: Houghton Library

Creator: Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914

Title: Charles S. Peirce papers

Identifier: MS Am 1632

Date: Creation: 1787-1951

Physical Description: 74 linear feet (165 boxes, 1 volume, 1 bundle)

Language Of Materials:
Collection materials are in English.

Overview:
Papers of philosopher, logician, scientist, and the founder of pragmatism, Charles S. Peirce. Also includes Peirce family correspondence.

Conditions Governing

Access: Restricted: closed for digitization.

Boxes 20-21 (Items 301-316) Boxes 43-45 (Items 694-693) Boxes 33-35 (Items 471-517)
Individual Items: 145 328 507 593 725 797-798 802 841 1355 1363-1364

For all other material, there are no restrictions on physical access. Collection is open for research.

Immediate Source Of

Acquisition: No accession number. Transfer from Harvard University Archives; received: 1960.

Processing Information:

Finding aid created by: Emilie Hardman

The finding aid for this collection is based on descriptions in Richard Robin's Annotated catalogue of the papers of Charles S. Peirce (Amherst, MA: University of Massachusetts Press, 1967) and is further informed by Christian Kloesel's annotations, which can be seen here. Kloesel suggests many items in the collection described by Robin have been moved in full or part to different places within the collection. These suggestions have been noted and are indicated with question marks throughout as the information has not been verified.

Data for items (1)-(1644) were extracted from Robin's catalog by John Old.

Preferred Citation For Publication: Charles S. Peirce Papers, 1787-1951 (MS Am 1632). Houghton Library, Harvard University.

Provenance:

Most material in this collection was given to the Harvard University Philosophy Department by Juliette Peirce, (the widow of Charles S. Peirce), in the winter of 1914-1915. The Harvard University Philosophy Department later deposited the collection with the Harvard University Archives.

Biographical / Historical

The word Aryan used in this collection has a long history. Initially, it was used to refer to groups of people who spoke a variety of related languages, including most of the European ones and several Asian ones. Over time, however, the word took on new and different meanings. In the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, some scholars and others transformed the Aryans into a mythical “race” that they claimed was superior to other races. In Germany, the Nazis promoted this false notion that glorified the German people as members of the "Aryan race." At the same time, they denigrated Jews, Black people, and Roma View This Term in the Glossary (Gypsies) as “non-Aryans.”

Arrangement

Arrangement of collection was determined by Richard Robin's Annotated catalogue of the papers of Charles S. Peirce (Amherst, MA: University of Massachusetts Press, 1967). Robin's descriptive work, and this finding aid, have been augmented by Christian Kloesel's annotations, which can be found here.

Scope And Contents

Includes notebooks, lectures, and other compositions on mathematics, pragmatism, metaphysics, logic, linguistics, and the history of science. Also includes correspondence which ranges over much of Peirce's private and professional life as well as separate files of Peirce family correspondence; and his translations and reviews; and biographical material. Some manuscripts are annotated by early editors, and some have been used as printer's copy.

Peirce's correspondents include: Paul Carus, James McKeen Cattell, Wendell Phillips Garrison, William Fearing Gill, George Shattuck Morison, Benjamin Peirce, James Mills Peirce, Albert Stickney and others. Also with correspondence of Juliette Peirce.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Simplest Possible Branch of Mathematics : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (1) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-9, 13, 17-33.

General Note:

Some materials may have been taken from others, e.g. p. 1 from (525), pp.17-33 from (687) and pp. 14-16 and 18 from (1250).

Brief discussion of paradisaical logic, i.e., system of logic in which only one value is supposed, provided another value (or other values) is not positively denied. The simplest kind of mathematics referred to, however, is a two-valued system of which Boole's algebra of logic is regarded as a special case. Inadequacies of Boolean algebra and some merits of secundal notation. Rules and examples for common mathematical operations in Charles S. Peirce's dyadic system.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Simplest Branch of Mathematics (SM) : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (2) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-2, 1-5.

General Note:

Item (512) moved here?

Incomplete, with an alternative p. 5.

The pure mathematics of existential graphs, alpha and beta parts, with definitions and permissions of transformation. See MS. 512 for more of MS. 2.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On Dyadics: the Simplest Possible Mathematics (D) : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (3) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. [?]-2.

General Note:

Moved to (25)?

Item (511) moved here?

Incomplete.

Intended as the first of a series of four memoirs, with plans for further memoirs on the application of mathematical theory to deductive logic. The doctrine of multitude and a working definition of continuity. See MS. 511.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Sketch of Dichotomic Mathematics (DM) : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (4) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 2 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-52.

General Note:

(p. 25 missing), also with 11 pp. of variants.

Nominal and real definitions; definition of terms, e.g., postulate, axiom, corollary, theorem, which are employed in mathematical or geometrical demonstration; canon of demonstration. Long digression which begins with recognition of seven schools of philosophy each determined by the emphasis placed upon one or more of the following concepts: form, matter, and entelechy. The relationship of these schools to the realist-nominalist controversy, with special attention given to the Aristotelian position. The nature of signs: sign and related notions, especially form, law, habit and entelechy; sign as having its being in the power, not act, of determining matter; sign as entelechy.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Dichotomic Mathematics (DM) : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (5) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 3 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-4, 1-3, 2-9, 6-11, 6-8, 10, 16-7, 45-46.

General Note:

Also with 22 pp. belonging to other drafts.

Similar in content to MS. 4, but without any of the digressions.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Dyadic Value System] : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (6) Box 1

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

2 pp.

General Note:

Moved to (565)?

The simplest of value systems serves as the foundation for mathematics and, indeed, for all reasoning, because the purpose of reasoning is to establish the truth or falsity of our beliefs, and the relationship between truth and falsity is precisely that of a dyadic value system.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Foundations of Mathematics (Foundations) : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (7) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-16.

General Note:

Items (8), (9), (10) and (11) moved here?

Also with 3 rejected pages, 17-19 of another draft. The MSS. below (Nos. 8-11) are drafts of this one, and all are concerned with the nature of signs.

Mathematics as dealing essentially with signs.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Foundations of Mathematics (Foundations) : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (8) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-4, 3-4.

General Note:

Moved to (7)?

Also with 4-8 of another draft.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Foundations of Mathematics] : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (9) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-5.

General Note:

Moved to (7)?

Also with rejected pages.

Vagueness, generality, and singularity.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Foundations of Mathematics] : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (10) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-2.

General Note:

Moved to (7)?

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Foundations of Mathematics] : autograph manuscript, circa 1903

Identifier: (11) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-2.

General Note:

Moved to (7)?

Incomplete.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Notes Preparatory to a Criticism of Bertrand Russell's Principles of Mathematics (B. Russell) : autograph manuscript, February 5, 1912

Identifier: (12) Box 1

Date: Creation: February 5, 1912

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-14.

General Note:

The comments on Russell's work are as follows:... true in the main and throughout, however, he betrays insufficient reflection on the fundamental conceptions of the subject, with the primary difficulty.. his not having begun with a thorough examination of the elements;.. the ultimate analytic of thought. The major part of the manuscript concerns Charles S. Peirce's own analytic of thought (theory of signs).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Logic of Quantity (L of Q) : autograph manuscript, circa 1895

Identifier: (13) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1895

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-13, 7-12.

General Note:

Also with an alternative p. 8 of another draft.

The principal questions raised are these: Why mathematics always deals with a system of quantity, what the different systems of quantity are and how they are characterized, and what the logical nature of infinity is. The relationship of logic and metaphysics to the three categories of Firstness, Secondness, and Thirdness. Singular, dual, and plural facts Chaldean metaphysics; chaos to determinacy; the evolutionary process. Postulates of mathematical logic (pp. 7-12).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On Quantity, with special reference to Collectional and Mathematical Infinity (Quantity) : autograph manuscript, circa 1895

Identifier: (14) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1895

Physical Description: 2 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-34.

General Note:

The nature of mathematics, pure and applied. In general, mathematics is concerned with the substance of hypotheses, drawing necessary conclusions from them; pure mathematics is concerned only with those hypotheses which contain nothing not relevant to the forms of deduction. The nature of quantity (real, rational, and imaginary). System of quaternions as an enlargement of the system of imaginary quantity. Possible grades of multitude. Spatial and temporal continuity. Common sense notions of continua, especially with regard to the flow of time. Continuum defined as a whole composed of parts, with the parts of the whole comprising a series, such that, taking any multitude whatever, a collection of those parts can be discovered the multitude of which is greater than the given multitude. Lastly, reasons are given for thinking that continuity exists beyond the evidence afforded by our natural beliefs in the continuity of space and time.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On Quantity, with special reference to Collectional and Mathematical Infinity (Quantity) : autograph manuscript, circa 1895

Identifier: (15) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1895

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-29.

General Note:

Incomplete.

Same questions raised as in MS. 14. Mathematics defined, with extended comments on the divisions of the sciences.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Logic of Quantity, and especially of Infinity (Logic of Quantity) : autograph manuscript, circa 1895

Identifier: (16) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1895

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1, 5-9, 7-18, 18-20.

General Note:

Item (18) moved here (or to (25))?

Several definitions of mathematics, including Aristotle's and Charles S. Peirce's. Mathematical proof and probable reasoning; the system and scale of quantity; the importance of quantity for mathematics. But to grasp the nature of mathematics is to grasp the three elements, which, with regard to consciousness, are feeling, consciousness of opposition, and consciousness of the clustering of ideas into sets Recognition of the three elements in the three kinds of signs logicians employ. An analysis of the syllogism.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On the Logic of Quantity (Logic of Quantity) : autograph manuscript, circa 1895

Identifier: (17) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1895

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-9.

General Note:

Also with 7-10 of another draft.

This manuscript should be compared with MS. 16, to which it bears a special similarity. See also MS. 250 where Charles S. Peirce defines mathematics as the tracing out of the consequences of an hypothesis. Five definitions of mathematics. Benjamin Peirce's definition found acceptable with modification. Science defined in terms of the activity of scientists, not in terms of its content or truths. Probable inference and certain features of mathematical proof (pp. 7-10).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. (Logic of Quantity) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (18) Box 1

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 3-4.

General Note:

Moved to (16) or (25)?

Defense of a modified version of Benjamin Peirce's definition of mathematics. Cf. MS. 78.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Logic of Quantity (Logic of Quantity) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (19) Box 1

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-12.

General Note:

Several theorems demonstrated, e.g., that every relation included under a preference is itself a preference. Solution is offered to the following problem: Required that property which a collection must have to prevent it from proceeding from any collection of which it forms a part.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Logic of Quantity (Logic of Quantity) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (24) Box 1

Date: Creation: circa 1903

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-3, 3-4 of another draft.

General Note:

Multitude defined in terms of collection, followed by a pragmatistic definition of collection.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Multitude and Number (Multitude) : autograph manuscript, 1897

Identifier: (25) Box 1

Date: Creation: 1897

Physical Description: 8 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-82.

General Note:

Items (3), (18), (28) and (33) moved here?

Also with rejected or alternative pages running brokenly from p. 7 to p. 71.

Most of manuscript was published (4.170-226, except 187n1) but omitted were several illustrations (pp. 21-24; 34) and several proofs of theorems, among which are the following: That the collection of possible sets of units which can be taken from discrete collections is always greater than the collection of units (pp. 12-13), that the sum of an enumerable collection of enumerable multitudes is an enumerable multitude (pp. 29-32), and that there is a vast collection of indefinitely dividant relations between the units of any denumerable collection (pp. 40-54).

Burks' category: G-1897-1.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. On Multitude (On Multitude) : autograph manuscript, circa 1897

Identifier: (26) Box 2

Date: Creation: circa 1897

Physical Description: 2 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-24.

General Note:

Also with 24 pp. of rejects and/or alternatives.

An inquiry into what grades of multitude of collections are mathematically possible. This is a logical inquiry because both a strict logica utens and the principles of logica docens are required. Collection is explained but not precisely defined. Provided are three axioms relating to collections and several theorems. The inquiry concludes with a discussion of the general method of drawing conclusions by means of the above system.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Considerations concerning the Doctrine of Multitude : autograph manuscript, circa 1905-1907

Setting out from two problems of dynamics both of which require for their solution the method of infinitesimals, Charles S. Peirce attempts an explanation of the method of infinitesimals, which requires, in turn, an explanation of collections and multiplicity. In addition, there is a discussion of the different modes of being, followed by a discussion of the distinction between reality and existence (for the purpose of showing that although nothing unreal can exist, something may be non-existent without being unreal).

Identifier: (117) Box 5

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-8.

General Note:

Published, in part, as 8.97-99. Unpublished (pp. 3-8). Denial of either the first or second of the two natural propositions, noted in that part of manuscript which was published, leads to a non-Euclidean geometry. Both of the corresponding kinds of non-Euclidean geometry are intelligible, and a consideration of plane geometry will suffice to show this.

Topics presupposes time, and time presupposes the doctrine of multitude. The topical properties of time; the hypothetically defined time of topics a true continuum; true continuity opposed to the pseudo-continuity (of the calculus). Instances of time, with the multitude of instances defined with the aid of the secundal system of enumeration. Points as possibilities, not actualized until something occurs to mark them. The dividing point between green and white is both green and white. Law of contradiction does not apply to potentialities. Census Theorem, Census Number, and Listing Numbers. Chapter I Introduction (pp. 1-39): Elementary account of the nature of mathematics; analysis of the game of tit-tat-too as an illustration of the process of deducing the consequences of hypotheses; definitions and the etymology of important terms. See MS. 1525 for possible early drafts of some of this material. Chapter II Sequences (pp. 40-76, with p. 61 missing): Sequences, both simple and complex. Chapter III The Fundamental Operations in Algebra (pp. 78-92, with pp. 77 and 93 missing): Fundamental operations in algebra; explicit and implicit functions; functions of several variables. Chapter IV Factors (pp. 94-106): Parts, divisors, and factors; prime factors; greatest common divisor of several numbers; multiples, dividends, and products; least common multiple; fundamental theorem of composition. Chapter V Negative Numbers (pp. 107-116): Definition and historical data. Chapter VI Fractional Quantities (pp. 117-130): Rational number explained; the system of rational numbers as including the values of all rational fractions except o/o. Chapter VII Simple Equations (pp. 131-173): Solution of linear equations; systems of simultaneous equations. Chapter VIII Ratios and Proportions (pp. 174-188): Ratios, proportions, anharmonic ratio. Chapter IX Surds (pp. 189-222, with p. 213 missing): Possibility and importance of surds; definition of limit; Achilles and the tortoise (p. 196); imaginary quantities; exercises and problems. Chapter X Topical Geometry (pp. 223-275, with pp. 259-273, 276-293 missing): Topical geometry explained; continuum; homo-geneity; tridimensionality of space; singularities; topical classes of surfaces; the topical census. Long footnote on the intelligibility of infinitesimals. Chapter XI Perspective (pp. 294-357): Graphics; homoloidal system of plates; dominant (optical) homoloids; projection; Desargues' Ten-Line theorem; the Nine-Ray theorem.

Problem in probabilities: mathematics of the roulette table. Charles S. Peirce concludes whimsically: That in an even game, say an honest roulette without zeros, all the players might make it a rule to leave off only when they had netted a winning equal to a single bet, and were their fortunes or backing unlimited, every man of them would be sure of success, while the bank, though it would not win anything, would never lose! Now let U.S. lend to each citizen.. and then allow the winnings to be taxed.

B. Pragmatism

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. The Basis of Pragmaticism. Meditation the First (Med) : autograph manuscript, circa 1905

Identifier: (279) Box 17

Date: Creation: circa 1905

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-16.

General Note:

Also with variants.

Types of readers who will not profit from this critical examination of pragmatism. The Harvard Lectures of 1903 presented the argument which finally convinced Charles S. Peirce of the truth of pragmatism. The argument of 1903 restated. Discussion of the ethics of terminology contains some amusing satire. The comparative merits of English and German; English better adapted to logic than German. A great mistake to attempt to reform English by way of German expressions out of harmony with it.

Of the different senses of philosophy, preference is stated for that sense in which it is synonymous with cenoscopy, i.e., the study of common experience. The need for a technical nomenclature and terminology in the idioscopic sciences. The situation in philosophy is somewhat different. Philosophy needs to admit into its language a body of words of vague significations with which to identify those vague ideas of ordinary life which it is its business to analyze. Logical analysis is not always adequate. Examples from the history of philosophy, especially Kant and Leibniz, of irresponsibility in logical analysis. Kant's use of necessary and universal. Blunders in logical analysis inevitable until proper method (pragmaticism) is adopted. Specifically, blunders result from the failure of philosophers to understand and accept the logic of relations. Elementary discussion of existential graphs (quite the luckiest find that has been gained in exact logic since Boole). Charles S. Peirce reflects bitterly on treatment received from institutions and publishers.

Unpublished is the argument for the truth of pragmatism based upon the argument of the Harvard Lectures of 1903 which, Charles S. Peirce notes, were not published in his lifetime because of the failure of a friend to recommend them for printing. The meaning of science. Heuristic, practical, and retrospective science distinguished. The meaning of philosophy. Cenoscopic and synthetic philosophy. Methods of cenoscopic research. The idea of growth, as found in Aristotle and as applied to knowledge generally. The divisions of cenoscopy, with metaphysics as the third and last division and normative science as the mid-division. The deplorable condition of metaphysics: the necessity of logic and the normative sciences generally as propaedeutic to it. The hard dualism of normative science, its distinctness from practical science, and its relationship to psychology. Action, effort, and surprise: effort and surprise only experiences from which we can derive concept of action. Doctrine of Signs. Modes of indeterminacy; indefiniteness and generality; the quantity and quality of indeterminacy. The relationship of law and existence.

pp. 1-48 (one notebook), 49-91 (second notebook).

General Note:

Selections from first notebook published as 1.294-299, 1.313, and 1.313n; selections from second notebook (pp. 65-69) were published as 1.350-352. Omissions from publication (First Notebook) include the disassociation of pragmaticism from some doctrines which have become associated with it; for example, the denial of the Absolute, the affirmation of a Finite God, making action (brute force) the summum bonum.. I am one of those who say 'We believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth and of all things visible and invisible' where the invisible things, I take it, are Love, Beauty, Truth, the Principle of Contradiction, Time, etc. Clearly I can have but the vaguest analogical notion of the Maker of such things, and Pragmaticism, I am sure, does not require that all my beliefs should be definite. Charles S. Peirce thinks that Royce in The World and the Individual comes closer to exhibiting the meaning of pragmatism than any exposition of it given by a pragmatist other than himself. Another misrepresentation of pragmaticism is to assert that pragmatism depreciates science. The principal question for pragmaticism must be whether thought has any meaning or purport beyond the simple apprehension of the thought itself. Also omitted is a discussion of the four sects of logic: Leibnizian, Associationist, Aristotelian, and Kantian. The analogy between the indecomposable elements of thought and the atoms of the different elements Logical terms and valencies. The indecomposable elements of the phaneron. Propositions and assertions. Omissions from publication (Second Notebook) include a discussion of the three modes of mental analysis (dissociation, precision, and discrimination). Application of these modes to primarity, secundarity, and tertianity, e.g., primarity can be prescindend though it cannot be dissociated from secundarity, but secundarity cannot be prescindend but only discriminated from primarity. Finally, the use of existential graphs to explain logical fallacy.

General Note:

The material collected in both volumes is for the second article of the 1905-06 Monist series. Volume I: Critical Common-sensism. Pragmatism is regarded as a more critical version of a philosophy of common sense. The indubitability of propositions with indubitability associated with vagueness. The nature of doubt: the relationship of doubt to feeling, habit, and belief. The relationship of Critical Common-sensism and the normative sciences, and the relationships among the normative sciences. Volume II: Generality and vagueness. Concept of God is vague; Being of God is indefinite. Criticism of Kant: Kant is nothing but a somewhat confused pragmatist. Ethical and logical control compared. Pragmatism connected with real possibility, with pragmatism rendered intelligible by the assertion of real possibility. Pragmatism's relationship to the normative sciences. Existence and reality: Generals are real but nonexistent.

This paper serves as a critical commentary on the Popular Science article of January 1878 (G-1877-5b). Applications of the pragmatic maxim to specific questions, e.g., are the so-called Laws of the Universe habits of the universe in some objective sense? Question of God's objectivity. God and Demiurge are distinguished. Brief consideration of what constitutes reality and characterizes propositions.

Published, in part, as 5.402n (pp. 33-37). Unpublished is the mention of an early anticipation of pragmatism in a Journal of Speculative Philosophy article of 1868 (G-1868-2). In that article Charles S. Peirce accepts two positions which underlie pragmatism: Critical Common-sensism and Scholastic realism. Critical Common-sensism differs from the Scottish notions of common sense. Two classes of indubitable propositions noted. Acritical inferences and reasoning. Logica docens and logica utens. Charles S. Peirce finds support of Critical Common-sensism in the writings of Avicenna. Several applications of pragmatism to the meaning of matter and time and to the notion of action at a distance. Theory of signs, especially symbols.

This manuscript was intended as the fourth article of the Monist series of 1905-06, with two more articles following: The fourth article was to begin the apology, the fifth to have contained the main argument, and the sixth to have provided the subsidiary arguments and illustrations. More specifically, a rhetorical defence of the principle of pragmatism in the Popular Science Monthly issues of November 1877 and January 1878; system of existential graphs; the nominalism of Ockham and J. S. Mill; objective and subjective generality; Scholastic realism; the three ways in which an idea can be mentally isolated from another (dissociation, precision, and discrimination). Among the variant pages are some interesting biographical data, especially Charles S. Peirce's reflections on his father's remarkable aesthetical discrimination and his boyhood impressions of visitors, Emerson included, to the family home in Mason Street, Cambridge.

Omitted from publication are comments on the circumstances which led to writing the various articles of the Monist series. In this connection Charles S. Peirce notes, with some horror, the view attributed by the New York Times to William James that practical preference was the basis of pragmatism and considers what James probably meant to say, noting James's definition of pragmatism in Baldwin's Dictionary of Psychology and Philosophy. The truth of pragmatism and its scientific proof. Charles S. Peirce reveals that he had passed through a doubt of pragmatism lasting very nearly twenty years. Discussion of the nature of doubt: the confounding of doubt with disbelief. System of existential graphs; comparison of existential graphs with chemical ones; existential and entitative graphs. Studies of modality: Charles S. Peirce's early views and subsequent modifications. Among the fragments one finds Charles S. Peirce's disagreement with Cantor on the matter of pseudo-continuity which for Charles S. Peirce raises a question of the ethics of terminology.

A liberal education in a hundred lessons: fifty lessons devoted to the teaching of some small branch of knowledge. Of the remaining fifty lessons, thirty-six were to be devoted to logic. Lectures begin with a discussion of the different kinds of mathematics. Dichotonic and trichotonic mathematics. Logic of relatives. Incident involving Sylvester, who claimed that mathematical work shown him by Charles S. Peirce, who, in turn, suspected that his work reduced to Cayley's Theory of Matrices, was really nothing more than Sylvester's umbral notation. Later Charles S. Peirce discovers, with some satisfaction, that what Sylvester called my umbral notation had originally been published in 1693 by Leibniz. Charles S. Peirce's bitterness revealed in his remark that he can find a more comfortable way of ending his days, if nobody is interested in his efforts to gather together the scattered outcroppings of his work in logic for the purpose of a more systematic presentation of it.

A knowledge of logic is requisite for understanding metaphysics. The three categories are not original with Charles S. Peirce; they permeate human thought for all time. Statement of his own early intellectual behavior. The year 1856 is given as the year of his first serious study of philosophy. Beginning with esthetics (Schiller's Aesthetische Briefe) he proceeded to logic and the analytic part of the Critic of Pure Reason. Mentions his subsequent neglect of esthetics and his incompetence in this area. Reflections on esthetics. Is there such a quality as beauty? Is beauty the name we give to whatever we enjoy contemplating regardless of the reasons for liking it? Perceptual judgments as involving generality and as being beyond the power of logic to criticize, as referring to singular objects, and as relating to continuous change (time, continuity, infinity). The nature of logical goodness and the end of argumentation. Logic and metaphysics. Pragmatism: the genealogy of a born pragmatist; pragmatism and realism; the ultimate meaning of a symbol. Charles S. Peirce's acceptance of the term meaning as a technical term of logic (as referring to the total intended interpretant of a symbol). The meaning of an argument and of a proposition (rhema); the meanings of such difficult abstractions as Pure Being, Quality, Relation. Definitions, it is stated, should be in terms of the conceptions of everyday life. Charles S. Peirce raises one possible objection to his formulation of the maxim of pragmatism, and ends this draft with some disparaging remarks about the state of logical studies at Harvard. The objection raised is this: If meaning consists in doing (or the intention to do), is there not a conflict with the view (to which Charles S. Peirce subscribes) that the meaning of an argument is its conclusion, since a conclusion is an intellectual phenomenon different from doing and presumably without relation to it?

The common noun, its late development and restriction to a peculiar family of languages. Term and index. Three truths necessary for the comprehension of the merits of pragmatism: that all our ideas are given to us in perceptual judgments; that perceptual judgments contain elements of generality (so that Thirdness is directly perceived); that the abductive faculty is a shading off of that which at its peak is called perception. This notebook was previously listed as missing. It begins with a description of the state of chemistry at the time Peirce took his degree in that subject and goes on to compare the rate of advance of chemistry with that of mathematics, in the course of which the "extraordinary mathematical development of the general doctrine of multitude" is noted. Peirce writes of his own contributions of 1867 and 1881 to that doctrine, acknowledging however the leadership of Cantor. But Dedekind is mentioned in connection with Peirce's defense of the priority of his own investigations. The notebook concludes with the start of an explanation of the system of existential graphs.

An article in the form of a letter to the editor of The Nation was published as follows: 5.11-13 (pp. 1-7); 5.464-496 (pp. 7-45 of one draft and pp. 46-87 of another; the last two sentences of 5.481 were spliced by the editors of the Collected Papers). Also published as 1.560-562 were pp. 20-27 of still another draft. Omitted from publication: an analysis of James's definition of pragmatism (pp. 10-13 of one of the alternative sections). James's pragmatism again, followed by a discussion of his own position; the two distinct opponents of pragmatism (Absolutists and Positivistic Nominalists); pragmatism and religion; law distinguished from brute fact, not, as the nominalists would have it, by being a product of the human mind, but, as the realists assert, by being a real intellectual ingredient of the universe; triadic predicates as always having an intellectual basis, the evidence for which is inductive; thoughts regarded as signs, with signs functioning triadically; three kinds of interpretants emotional, energetic, and logical; the distinction between association and suggestion; the syllogism as an associative suggestion; corollary and theoretic reasoning, of which an example of theoretic deduction is the Ten Point Theorem of Van Standt (pp. 10-56 of a long draft from which pp. 20-27 were published). The three kinds of interpretants of signs; ultimate intellectual interpretants; pragmatism and common sense, with the meaning of critical common sense explained (pp. 43-59 of an alternative section of the long draft numbered 10-56 and described above). Kernel of pragmatism; concepts equated with mental signs; the object and interpretant of a sign distinguished; the problem of ultimate, or naked, meaning; existential meanings; the meaning of an intellectual concept; qualities of feeling as meanings of signs, where qualities are neither thoughts nor existential events; the distinction between real and immediate (as represented by a sign) object, with immediate objects resembling emotional meaning and real objects corresponding to existential meaning; mathematical concepts as examples of logical meaning; the relationship of logical meaning to desires and habits (pp. 11-34 of another alternative section). Object and interpretant (meaning); the different units of interpretants (meanings); pragmatic definition and a prediction that pragmatism will occupy the same position in philosophy as the doctrine of limits occupies in mathematics (pp. 14-25 of an alternative section of the one described immediately above). Kernel of pragmatism; theory of signs; by inference a sign first comes to be recognized as such; the elementary modes of inference (pp. 12-30 of an alternative section). The divisions of geometry; a problem in topics; the Census Theorem and Listing Numbers; the function of consciousness; concepts and habits; the vulnerability of James and Schiller arising from their (apparent) denial of infinity, including an infinite Being (pp. 62-77 of still another alternative section). An attempt to define sign; the sense in which utterer and interpreter are essential to signs; the immediate and real objects of signs; a brief note on the Census Theorem (pp. 12-90, with the exception of pp. 46-87 which were published).

The following information was supplied by Professor Max H. Fisch: Of the present contents of this folder, some sequences of pages on the rag paper with the watermark J. Whatman 1868 may be parts of the paper read to the Metaphysical Club in November 1872. Others are probably, indeed almost certainly, parts of The Logic of 1873. The two slightly longer sheets of rag paper contain two pages of a draft of 'The Fixation of Belief,' probably of 1876 or 1877. The sheets of wood pulp paper numbered 80, 81, 86, or at least pages 80 and 81, probably belong to some work of the 1890's in which Peirce went over the same ground again. In connection with the numbered pages, see MS. 1002. It is of some interest to note that the earlier name for the method of tenacity was the method of obstinacy, and instead of authority, Charles S. Peirce employed the word despotism.

The two kinds of scientific inference induction and hypothesis differ from the syllogistic inference as much as they do from each other. Nevertheless, the three coordinate classes of reasoning are deduction, induction, and hypothesis.

Also with 2 pp. of another start.

This lecture begins the second half of the lecture series. The definition of logic. Kinds of logical systems. All deductive reasoning is merely explicatory. Direct and indirect implication. What a word denotes and what it connotes. The sphere and the content of a word. Extension and comprehension. Being (all breadth, no depth) and Nothing (all depth, no breadth). Modification of the law of the inverse proportionality of extension and comprehension. The information of a term. On the subject of induction and hypothesis, Charles S. Peirce writes of the slight preponderance of true over false scientific inferences, and he finds that the reason for this is the vague tendency for the whole to be like any of its parts, taken at random.

The attempts to define logic suffer from an admixture of logic, anthropology, and psychology. Analysis of the triad of thing, representation, and form. The three kinds of representations: signs, copies, symbols. Conditions to which symbols are subject. The relationship between the syllogism and scientific inference. The proper form of induction. Induction and hypothesis distinguished. Induction increases the extension of subject; hypothesis increases the comprehension of predicate. Moreover, induction discovers a law which is a prohibition; hypothesis discovers a law which is an imposition.

Physical Description:

15 double pp. (with one double p. missing); plus pp. 1-4, incomplete, entitled Lecture on the Grounds of Inference.

General Note:

Lecture on the Grounds of Inference. Kinds of propositions: denotative, informative, connotative. Relationship of denotative, informative, connotative propositions to propositions which are simple, enumerative, and conjunctive. The peculiarities of the latter. The three kinds of inference and their ground.

General Note:

Long recapitulation of the previous lecture. What is the probability that an induction or hypothesis is true? Charles S. Peirce concludes that the question is senseless both from the viewpoint of the nature of propositions and the nature of logic. Sundry comments on the views of Sir William Hamilton.

Presumably the 12th lecture of the University Lecture Series. Every man who wishes to vindicate his pretensions to philosophic power must display it by the discovery of an error in Kant. Most usually the critics of Kant have simply misunderstood him. Examples of misunderstanding provided. A preliminary study of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, treating such topics as the A Priori, The Transcendental Esthetic (the objective validity of the representations of space and time), Kant on the nature of judgment.

Physical Description:

pp. 1-14 (double pages).

General Note:

Presumably part of the University Lecture Series. There is a note that another lecture on Waddington, De Remusat, Graty, and others was to follow this one. Several modern theories of science treated as inseparable from the metaphysics of their authors. For example, Whewell is a Kantian. Comte is helplessly restricted to a simple intellectual view. Criticism of Mill's logic, especially Mill's views on the ground of induction.

Investigation consists of two parts: reasoning and observation. The confusion between thought as an operation of thinking and thought as an object. Belief and the habitual connection of ideas, with belief and habit of thought being one and same thing. Fixation of belief. No genuine doubt attaches to the scientific method of fixing belief, just as no genuine doubt can attach to the belief in real things.

General Note:

Investigation involves both observation and reasoning. Reasoning as beginning with the most obvious premises and leading ultimately to one conclusion. Reality must be connected with this chain of reasoning at one extremity or the other. Nominalistic and realistic views of reality. The scientific presentation of the doctrines of logic requires the identity of the object of true knowledge with reality. The existence of things (as studied by physicists) depends upon their manifestability. Extending this conception to all real existence leads to an idealistic theory of metaphysics, once it is clearly understood that observation and reasoning are perpetually leading us toward certain final opinions whose objects may be said to have real existence.

History of the doctrine of association which begins with Aristotle and continues with the English writers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, e.g., Digby, Locke, Hume, Hartley, Gay, among others, and the nineteenth-century English, German, and American thinkers, e.g., James Mill, Hamilton, Bain, Lewes, James, Herbert, Wundt. Notwithstanding the writer's realism and realistic idealism, and consequent high appreciation of Schelling, Hegel, and others, and respect for German industry, he cannot but regard the English work in philosophy as far more valuable and English logic as infinitely sounder.

Association of ideas. Process of unification (the blending and spreading of ideas). Distinguishable grades in the process of unification. The conception of the present. Being and substance. The passage from being to substance is mediated by accident, whose threefold nature includes quality, relation, and representation. Quality is Firstness; relation, Secondness; representation, Thirdness. Primary qualities and feelings. Phenomenalism and the relativity of knowledge. The two great genera of relations: those whose ground is prescindible and those whose ground is not. Precision, or abstraction, distinguished from other modes of mental separation, e.g., discrimination and dissociation. Compare with On a New List of Categories [PAAAS series on logic (1867)]. Two definitions of mathematics analyzed: (a) mathematics as the method of drawing necessary conclusions, and (b) mathematics as the study of the hypothetical states of things. Mathematics does not require ethics; logic does, however. Preliminary dissection of mathematics into several branches. The important rules, theorems, and demonstrations of dichotomic mathematics. Simplest mathematics is a two-valued system, but even though its subject is limited, it does enter as an element into the other parts of mathematics, and hence is important. In regard to trichotomic mathematics, it is asked, how is the mathematician to take a step without recognizing the duality of truth and falsity? Fundamental fact about the number three is its generative potency. Philosophical truth has its origin and rationale in mathematics. A chemical analogy. In one of the alternative sections, there is a lengthy account of Charles S. Peirce's dispute with Sylvester over who should receive credit for discovering the system of nonions.

Published, in part, as 6.349-352 (pp. 20X-220). Unpublished: long footnote on the term conscience, leading to eight rules having to do with the ethics of terminology and the governing of philosophical terminology. Charles S. Peirce proposes to list and examine twenty-eight conceptions or classes of supposed goods, e.g., the desirable in itself, but only gets as far as the fifteenth (all were taken from Greek philosophy, with Plato's conception of the ultimate good to have formed the basis of the fifteenth conception). At this point in the manuscript a long digression occurs which continues to the close. The digression concerns disputed points of Plato's life. In this connection, there is considerable material on the chronological order of the Platonic Dialogues as well as on Lutoslawski's researches. Sophistries in the Sophist, but Plato's definition of being as power approved. Various comments on the Politicus and Timaeus. For Charles S. Peirce, Plato's strength lies in his ethics, not in his metaphysics and logic.

Reason and instinct. The wise man in matters of greatest importance will follow, not his reason, but his heart. Reason and religion. The contention that metaphysics is a guide for the soul is humbug. Moreover, the talent for reasoning is as uncommon as the talent for music, and the cultivation of the first requires a greater effort with fewer immediate rewards. Charles S. Peirce's bitterness is not easily restrained. He advises against philosophy as a career, shows his disdain of Harvard gentlemen and of publishers who refuse to publish treatises on logic on the ground that the author is not a university professor and that the work would not pay for itself.

Deleted: pp. 1-4, 11-17, 18-22 on the relationship between philosophy and mathematics and between philosophy and the exact sciences, on the gross abuse of the word realism, on the Peircean categories and the logic of relatives. Charles S. Peirce offers an explanation (suggested by a theorem of the logic of relatives that no polyads higher than triads are required to express all relations) of why his list of categories is complete. Co-discoverer, with De Morgan, of the logic of relatives, Charles S. Peirce introduces the reader to that logic by means of existential graphs.

Peircean categories of Firstness, Secondness, Thirdness. The system of graphs is a consequence of Charles S. Peirce's study of the categories. Logic of relatives and the notion of generality (universality). The continuum as the true universal. Kant on continua. The question of reality. The nominalist-realist controversy. The tendency to think of nature as syllogizing, even on the part of the mechanist. But nature also makes inductions and retroductions. Infinite variety of nature testifies to her originality (or power of retroduction). That continuity is real and the significance of this fact for a philosophy of life. Charles S. Peirce's extreme realism lies in his acceptance of the view that every true universal, every continuum, is a living and conscious being. On page 28, there is a marginal note signed WJ (William James?): This is too abrupt along here. Should be more mediated to the common mind.

At the beginning Charles S. Peirce offers the following plan for his lecture series: 1. What makes a reasoning sound, 2. Existential Graphs, Alpha and Beta, 3. General Explanations, Phenomenology and Speculative Grammar, 4. Existential graphs, Gamma Part, 5. Multitude, 6. Chance, 7. Induction, 8. Abduction. Collection and multitude; syllogism of transposed quantity; Fermatian reasoning; first and second ultranumerable multitude; continuity (pp. 78-122). Gamma graphs (pp. 124-138). The beginning of a lecture occasioned by the death of Herbert Spencer. Mentioning his personal encounters with Spencer, Charles S. Peirce writes on Spencer's evolutionism and his influence on philosophy generally (pp. 140- 158).

Physical Description: 2 folder

Physical Description:

2 notebooks. pp. 2-130.

General Note:

Published, in part, as 6.88-97 (pp. 8-62). Omitted: the relationship between logic and mathematics; independence of logic from metaphysics but not vice versa (pp. 2-7). Doctrine of chances: reference of the word chance, in all its meanings, to variety; chance not a matter of ignorance but of the immense diversity of the universe; the tendency of this diversity to grow into uniformities; the conception of the long run; mathematical theory of probabilities; probability as requiring some objective meaning; Charles S. Peirce's advice to stop talking of probabilities in connection with the doctrine of chances and to talk instead of ratios of frequency; the difficulty most people have of understanding why it is not logically impossible that an event whose probability is zero should nevertheless occur; and, finally, Hume on miracles (pp. 62-130).

Physical Description:

pp. 96-152.

General Note:

Volume II of the Seventh Lecture. Law, uniformity, and variety. Critical comments on Mill's views on the uniformity of nature. For Charles S. Peirce it is obvious that nature is not uniform, but that variety is nature's leading characteristic. His realism is opposed to Mill's nominalism. The problem of induction, with solutions by Abbe Gratry, Laplace, and Charles S. Peirce.

A second version of the above title, A Syllabus of Certain Topics of Logic, became the title of the pamphlet published by Alfred Mudge and Son, Boston, 1903. The pamphlet, however, is not an exact copy of the manuscript, several sections having been omitted. From the manuscript, pp. 1-26 and 137-149 were published in the pamphlet as pp. 1-14 and 15-20 respectively. Transformation rules for existential graphs are treated in an abridged form on pp. 20-23 of the pamphlet. For publication of the pamphlet in the Collected Papers, see G-1903-2b. Pages 43-46, 47-48, 48-50, and 50-89 published respectively as 2.274-277, 2.283-284, 2.292-294, and 2.309-331. Omitted from publication: sundry logical conceptions; Peircean categories of Firstness, Secondness, Thirdness; the possibility of certain kinds of separation of thought; dissociation, precision, discrimination; the categories in their forms of Firstness (phenomenology); the normative sciences and their interrelations; the division of logic into speculative grammar, logical critic, and methodeutic (pp. 27-42). Arguments as symbols; classification of arguments into deduction, induction, and abduction; etymology of deduction (pp. 89-105).

Evidently prepared as an address to the American Academy. Charles S. Peirce mentions that existential graphs were discovered by him late in 1896, but that he was practically there some fourteen years before. The graphs were not invented to serve as a calculus, but to dissect the inferential process. Two puzzles examined with a view toward testing the system of graphs. One puzzle concerns the relation of signs to minds, and of communication from one mind to another. The other puzzle concerns the composition of concepts and the nature of judgment or, antipsychologically speaking, propositions, Signs; reality; conventions of the system of existential graphs.

Pages 78 ff. present another algebraic system which is labelled the Algebra of Dyadic Relatives and which seems to have fascinated Professor Schröder much more than it has me. The Algebra of Triadic Logic is mentioned (But I have never succeeded in perfecting it).

Indecomposable transformations. Rules of transformation, with commutation and association developed from these rules. Implication; contradiction and excluded middle; aggregation and composition. Ethics of terminology applied to the case of Boole's creation of logical algebra. Transitive relations; impossibility; identity and lines of identity. Propositions and signs; universal, particular, individual propositions; subject of propositions. Among the variants, the following topics occur: lines of identity; individual, definite, and singular terms; rules for existential graphs. Also the initial discussion of categoriology in connection with logical terms.

Part I. A reference to Charles S. Peirce's New Elements of Mathematics, for which no publisher could be found, and mention of the loss of Charles S. Peirce's power of writing about logic in a mathematical way, which, in point of fact, he no longer admires. Part II. On definition, postulate, axiom, corollary, theorem; signs, interpretants, entelechy; theory and practice; real relations and reactions; judgment and proposition; judgment and assertion; belief, affirmation, and judgment; doctrine of signs. Criticism of nominalism. The nature of law; event and fact; internal and external causes. Law signifies more than mere uniformity; it involves real connections. An improvement upon the traditional doctrine of causation. Symbols unable to exert force, but do govern things (for they are laws). A symbol signifies what it does, as in the feeling of having been in a present situation before - a case of accident, not of inherent necessity. Symbols as having grades of directness to the limit of being their own significations, and as having the power to reproduce themselves and to cause real facts. Reality as the limit of the endless series of symbols. Symbols and language, with language unable to provide a basis for logic. How the constitution of the human mind may compel men to think is not the question; and the appeal to language appears to me to be no better than an unsatisfactory method of ascertaining psychological facts that are of no relevancy to logic. But if such appeal is to be made (and logicians generally do make it, in particular their doctrine of the copula appears to rest solely upon this) it would seem that they ought to survey human languages generally and not confine themselves to the small and extremely peculiar group of Aryan speech.

This item was examined for harmful language in June 2024 to address outdated and harmful descriptive language. During that review, it was decided that the potentially harmful and problematic racial term is derived from the text of the item. In order not to censor history or make searching difficult, the description has been left as-is. A contextual note situating the usage of the term has been added. Incomplete.

This is one of several attempts by Charles S. Peirce in 1909 to write an introduction to a collection of his papers on pragmatism. This introduction defines science in terms of what it is that animates the true scientist; namely, the dedicated search for truth for its own sake. Charles S. Peirce rejects both the Aristotelian notion that science is syllogistically demonstrated knowledge and the notion that science is systematized knowledge. Reference to Lady Welby's signifiics.

Charles S. Peirce's estimation of his own mental powers. He speaks of having heard the most extravagant estimates placed upon my mental powers.. my principal deficiency, which is that my brain is small. This renders me incapable of thoroughly grasping together any considerable number of details; and one consequence is that I do not readily pass from one subject, or occupation of thought, to another; whence my persistency. Linguistic expression is not natural to Charles S. Peirce, who claims never to think in words, but always in some kind of diagram. His difficulties with foreign languages. In college, I received the most humiliating marks for my themes.. My amicable teacher Professor Francis James Child.. thought I took no pains. But I did. Charles S. Peirce attributes his awkwardness of linguistic expression to his left-handedness, noting that he once wrote with facility right-handed. To grasp what abstract thought is about requires more than reading about doing something - it requires actually doing it. The literary habit - Charles S. Peirce's term for it - is ruinous.

The meaning of the word real. Charles S. Peirce refers to his review of Frazer's edition of Berkeley, in which he took the qualified realist position of Duns Scotus. Here Charles S. Peirce comes out for an unqualified version of realism. Charles S. Peirce regards himself as a disciple of Berkeley, although he is opposed to Berkeley's denial of matter as well as to his nominalism. The distinction between God's reality and God's existence. God's reality, apart from the question of God's existence, cannot be doubted by anyone who meditates upon the question. Belief in God is a natural instinct. Defense of final causes. Ratiocination and instinct. Charles S. Peirce is guided by the following maxim: Define all mental characters as far as possible in terms of their outward manifestations. This maxim is roughly equivalent to the rule of pragmatism. It can be said to aid security but not uberty of reasoning. Yet the maxim of Pragmatism does not bestow a single smile upon beauty, upon moral virtue, or upon abstract truth, the three things that alone raise Humanity above Animality. The science of psychology is of no help in laying the foundations of a sane philosophy of reasoning, and precisely why Charles S. Peirce believes this to be so.

"Reality," "state of things," "actuality," and "reasoning" defined. Reality is that aspect of the being of anything which is independent of the thing's being represented. The trustworthiness of immediate knowledge (sense perception) testifies only to this or that single state of things. Reasoning testifies to the truth that lies beyond our ken. Charles S. Peirce wonders what the eternal habits are, beyond those which involve the tridimensionality of space and the general mutability of time. Satisfactory and unsatisfactory feelings.

Physical Description:

99 pp.

General Note:

The topics of these fragments range widely from Charles S. Peirce's comment on his habit of thinking in the syntax of existential graphs to discussions of probability, orders of induction (crude, quantitative, qualitative), the divisions of deduction as corollarial and theorematic; introduction of the term adduction, with a note that the adductions of Socrates were of a crude order. Also notes on the history of logic (Aristotle, Bacon, English logicians) and reflections on the meaning of pragmatism, and its connection with signs and habits In regard to the origins of the word pragmatism, Charles S. Peirce writes: It was about 1870 - I don't think it could have been as late as 1872 - that I invented the word..

Criticism of the view that the probability of inductive conclusions is calculated by inverse probabilities. Charles S. Peirce takes the position that in inductive reasoning the fact stated in the conclusion does not follow from the facts stated in the premises with any definite probability, but that from the manner in which the facts stated in the premises have come to our knowledge it follows that in assigning to a certain ratio of frequency the value concluded we shall be following a rule of conduct which must operate to our advantage in the long run.

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-15.

General Note:

Unfinished, 6-14 of a discarded draft, plus 6 pp. also discarded.

Charles S. Peirce's plan to divide his book into two parts, one part concerned with logical critic and the other with the application of the principles of logical critic to religious questions. The meaning of philosophy as a heuristic science of categorical truth. Philosophy based upon the common experience of all mankind. Doubt and belief opposed. Positive and negative doubt distinguished, with negative doubt regarded as the mere absence of belief. The meaning of real; its Latin derivation. Reality and hallucinatory experience. Common sense and critical common sense. Verbs and the Basque language (p. 15).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Important Jottings for my Critique of the Articles of Religious Faith : autograph manuscript, April 30, 1911

Identifier: (856) Box 52

Date: Creation: 2 pp. of one of the alternative sections are dated April 5 and 7, 1911

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-18.

General Note:

Also with several alternative sections.

The contempt for religious faith in scientific circles reveals, not open-mindedness, but prejudice. Deduction, induction, and retrodution are the only kinds of reasoning. Deduction as either necessary or probable. Determinism and free will. Over-specialization on the part of the average scientist has made him culturally ignorant - a queer mixture of enlightenment and of what is the equivalent of superstition. Laws of nature. Miracles and ultramiracles. Two of the alternative sections contain a discussion of existential graphs.

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-5.

General Note:

Incomplete.

This is the first lecture of the course planned in MS. 876. Double purpose of lecture: (1) to determine what a reasonable mind of the day ought to think of religion and (2) to comment on the validity of reasoning in general. Three and only three kinds of reasoning. Abduction, or retrodution. Charles S. Peirce's objectivity on the question of God's existence. If there is an Absolute, it is nothing like God.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. An Essay on the Limits of Religious Thought written to prove that we can reason upon the nature of God : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (858) Box 52

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

8 pp.

General Note:

There are two dates on the verso of one of the pages: April 10; 1857 and January 11; 1861. The possibility of giving intelligible definitions of things which themselves can not be comprehended. Is the definition of infinite possible? The three necessary modes of dependency are community, causality, and influx. The three perfect degrees of modality are possibility, actuality, and necessity. All degree admits of one of three successive degrees: nullity, positivity, and perfection. All stages have one of three temporal expressions: retrogression, contemporaneity, or succession. The three intuitions of expression. The three total quantities of intuition and the three infinite qualities of quantity. Lastly, the three influxual dependencies of quality: negation, reality, infinity.

Physical Description: 1 folder

General Note:

Call number Am 805.

Thirty-nine pages, being a collection of aphorisms on such subjects as genius, love, solitude, worship, prayer, heaven, impudence and grace, passion and pleasure, freedom and causation, classification of the human faculties. Sample: Best maxim in writing, perhaps, is really to love your reader for his own sake. These aphorisms were apparently transcribed by Charles S. Peirce from various other writings of his on several occasions. Entry number LXX, for instance, is dated 1866 Nov. 20, and reads: What is not a question of a possible experience is not a question of fact. This seems to be a slight revision of an entry in the Logic Notebook (MS. 339), p. 11v also dated 1866 Nov. 20: What is not a question of what can possibly be known is not a question of fact.

General Note:

The first three chapters constitute the Introduction and are as follows: Chapter I, Domain, Basis, and Fabric of Metaphysical Thought; Chapter II, The Insufficiency of Dialectics (ground of dogmatical, psychological, and logical dialectics); Chapter III, On the Uselessness of Transcendentalism. The next chapter, the first chapter of Book I, is entitled Principles and deals with man as the measure of all things. More generally, these chapters are concerned with metaphysics as the philosophy of primal truths; that is, whose truths are the primary conditions of all science. Fundamental distinctions of metaphysics. Metaphysics, psychology, and religion. Truth and faith. Refutation of transcendentalism. Notes on the work of Kant, Hume, and Mansel. Idealism, materialism, realistic pantheism as representing the three worlds of mind, matter, and God. These worlds mutually exclude and include each other.

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

48 pp.

General Note:

Also with 2 pp. of an earlier draft.

The earlier draft of 2 pp. is an outline draft of G-1868-2a. Twelve questions asked and answered dogmatically. The questions are concerned with the possibility of ultimate cognitions; immediate self-consciousness; knowledge of the external world; truth and the agreement of logical conclusion with information; contradiction as not always signifying falsity; matter as not necessary to reality; thought and signs; the meaning of the unknowable. The later draft concerns the proper method for determining how we think; self-evidentness and self-consciousness; the perceived and the imagined; our knowledge of the external world; thinking and signs; signs of the unknowable. Is there any cognition which is absolutely incapable of being known? Have we any intuitions? Some of the questions raised in the earlier draft are raised again and this time answered less dogmatically.

Comments on Balfour's British Association Address (August 17; 1904) on the constitution of matter, especially the electron theory. The experimentalist's usage of phenomenon. The confusion between belief in a reality which is expressible in phenomenistic terms and belief in reality which is not so expressible.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Notes on Portions of Hume's Treatise of Human Nature : autograph manuscript, circa 1905

Identifier: (939) Box 56

Date: Creation: circa 1905

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

44 pp.

General Note:

Also with 5 pp. of variants.

For the probable date of the manuscript, see S. P. Langley correspondence for a letter from Charles S. Peirce, dated June 1, 1905. Charles S. Peirce considers only Part IV, Sections 1 and 2 of the Treatise. Criticism of Hume's analysis of reasoning leads to an exposition of his own views. Association of beliefs, acritical reasoning, and reasoning (abductive, inductive, and deductive). Reasoning as that special variety of action which is under self-control. Probability and certainty; genuine and counterfeit beliefs; indubitability of beliefs and instincts Hume's nominalistic metaphysics in the context of the nominalist-realist dispute. Percept and perceptual judgment as well as existence and reality distinguished. Three grades of complexity of being, with the triadic mode the most complex. Three kinds of triadic relations: collectivity, energy, signs. The different kinds of signs.

Hegel and Charles S. Peirce mean nearly the same thing by existence. Charles S. Peirce can almost accept Hegel's definition as the immediate unity of reflection-into-self and reflection-into-another (his reservation concerns reflection). Hegel misplaces existence by putting it under the first part of his Encyclopaedia (Logic) and under the second division (Wesen), whereas he places time under the second part (Nature). For Charles S. Peirce, time would first have had to be organized before nature could have begun.

Identifier: (954) Box 56

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

5 pp. and 10 pp.

General Note:

The manuscript of 5 pp. is concerned with speculation on the possibility that Darwin was influenced by Malthus and the political economists. The manuscript of 10 pp. is concerned with the three modes of evolution: Darwinian, Lamarckian, and that mode by which the mechanical effects of external causes, which go to break up habits, especially habits of heredity, make forms vary, in determinate ways. Also: spontaneity and law, with law the product of evolution; matter as mind under almost complete domination of habit; synechism and questions concerning religion, morality, and telepathy.

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

14 pp.

<http://nrs.harvard.edu/urn-3:FHCL.HOUGH:12486077>

General Note:

Probably an introduction to an article on air-sailing. Problem of mechanical flight, including an historical account of researches on the problem, beginning with the work of K. H. Schellbach.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Report of the First Experimental Run of the Air-Ship of Count von Zeppelin (Z) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1012) Box 59

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-14.

General Note:

Also with 5 pp. of variants.

An account of the preparations made in 1899 and 1900 on Lake Constance for the first airship ascension. It is quite likely that the above is a translation made for Langley of the Smithsonian.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. The Prospects of Air-Sailing : autograph manuscript, circa 1895

Identifier: (1013) Box 59

Date: Creation: circa 1895

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-51.

General Note:

Also with an alternate p. 28.

Hydrodynamics involved in a fish's swimming upstream. Flight of birds. Professor Langley's theory of the aerodynamics of soaring. In general, Charles S. Peirce treats the kinds of problems and preparation required before an airship can be successfully launched. He thought that wind should be used as motive power. Prediction of success, with commercial value foreseen.

G. Chemistry

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Acetylene Gas (Acetylene) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1030) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-16.

General Note:

The role of acetylene as an illuminating gas. Its commercial value and its greatest disadvantages. Way of avoiding explosions. The history of the discovery of the gas. Refutation of the claims of Berthelot, especially his theory of thermo-chemistry. Acetylene's importance in breaking down the barrier between the organic and the inorganic.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Acetylene : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1031) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-19.

General Note:

Long sheets, with several pages of inserts and variants.

The content of this paper is similar to that of MS. 1030, but more detailed.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Acetylene Gas (Acetylene) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1032) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-6.

General Note:

Also with 2 loose first pages and a p. 47.

Early draft of MS., 1030.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Digest of the Chemistry of Acetylene (Acetylene) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1033) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

1-4, continuous, 5-20, 28-43; 5-7.

General Note:

Also with 6 pp. of variants and 1 p. of logic notes.

The history, properties, and formation of acetylene.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Notes on Acetylene] : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1034) Box 60

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 35-158 (p. 114 missing).

General Note:

Also with one unnumbered sheet of calculations and one sheet dated Astor Library 1898 Apr. 26.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Pending Claim] : typescript, April 27, 1896

Identifier: (1035) Box 60

Date: Creation: April 27, 1896

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

1 p.

General Note:

Application of Charles S. Peirce for a generator for acetylene and other gases. Serial No. 589239.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Argon, Helium, and Helium's Partner : autograph manuscript, circa 1890?

Identifier: (1036) Box 60

Date: Creation: circa 1890?

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-5.

General Note:

On the discovery of new elements, spectrum analysis, and Mendelyev's Periodic Law. Description of the total eclipse of 1869 in Kentucky, where Charles S. Peirce was sent as part of the Coast Survey Expedition. As an assistant to Professor Winlock of the Harvard College Observatory, Charles S. Peirce claims that he was the first to see argon.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Argon, Helium, and the Partner of Helium. Continued : autograph manuscript, circa 1890?

Identifier: (1037) Box 60

Date: Creation: circa 1890?

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-8.

General Note:

On argon.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Chemistry : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1038) Box 60

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-5.

General Note:

Definitions of substance, elementary substance, and chemical compound. Valency and chemical graphs. Mendelyev and the array of chemical elements

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Chemistry The Elements : autograph manuscript, undated (but a reference to Clarke 1897 on p. 1)

Identifier: (1039) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated (but a reference to Clarke 1897 on p. 1)

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

55 pp.

General Note:

Also with fragments and mathematical jottings.

Mendelyev's array of the elements

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Notes on table of atomic weights (Notes on At. Wts.) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1040) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-6.

General Note:

Also with 3 pp. of variants and 24 sheets of calculations.

Dates appear on four of the loose sheets, one of which is headed Table of Atomic Weights compiled from very insufficient data in 1905. Another sheet reads: Atomic Weights compiled without recent data 1908. Charles S. Peirce regards the table of atomic weights as one of the two most extraordinary achievements of inductive logic (Kepler's achievement is the other).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Valency (Ve) : autograph manuscript, circa 1905

Identifier: (1041) Box 60

Date: Creation: circa 1905

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-26.

General Note:

Also with 6 pp. of variants.

Charles S. Peirce sets out to discuss the mode of composition of ideas, developing an analogy between simple ideas and chemical elements

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Valency (V) (V..) : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1042) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-8, 1-12, 5-14.

General Note:

Also with 10 pp. of variants.

Earlier draft of MS. 1041.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Note.. to be printed in small type at the end of the article : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1043) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-5.

General Note:

The article referred to here is the article on valency (MSS. 1041 and 1042, if completed). Charles S. Peirce favors the strict law of valency, but admits that there are some problems in connection with its application.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. A Proposal of a change in the Atomic Weights with a remark on the Periodicity of the Properties of the Elements : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1044) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

8 pp.

General Note:

Charles S. Peirce proposes that the present atomic weights be multiplied by 4, and that every element whose place is set in Mendelyeev's scheme receive an ordinary number. This two-part proposal, Charles S. Peirce suggests, has pedagogical and mnemonic advantages.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. The Seventy Decanes : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1045) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

5 folded sheets (9 pp.).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Chemical Curves : autograph manuscript notebook, undated

Identifier: (1046) Box 60

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

General Note:

Curves of the expansion of water, of the density of mixtures of sulphuric acid and water, etc.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Views of Chemistry: sketched for Young Ladies : autograph manuscript seven small notebooks, circa 1861

Identifier: (1047) Box 61

Date: Creation: circa 1861

Physical Description: 1 folder

General Note:

The topics covered in the seven notebooks are as follows: kinds of matter, chemical method, qualitative analysis, salts, equivalence of force, states of aggregation, tables illustrating the equations of chemical force.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Fragments] : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1048) Box 61

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

83 pp.

General Note:

Also with a small notebook filled with calculations pertaining to chemistry.

Among the fragments are curves of the density of the mixture of alcohol and water and of the mixture of sulphuric acid and water. Also, calculation of the axis of the upper part of the curve of residuals of atomic weights and various syntheses.

General Note:

A good part of what has been collected here appears to be material for a report or reports to the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Included are notes to superiors and subordinates in the Survey; a description of the Gravitation and Astronomical Station, Ebensburg, Cambria Co., Pennsylvania; pendulum readings at the Smithsorlian and in Ann Arbor, Ithaca, and Madison; calculation for Gautier pendulums; the comparison of a metal decimetre with a glass decimetre; notes on a clock signal and self-switch; list of books and apparatus charged to Charles S. Peirce; corrections to Appendices 15 and 16 of the Report of 1884. Approximately one-hundred-fifty leaves with red and blue numbers serawled on one side have been separated from the rest. These constitute a miscellaneous collection of worksheets, numbered by Charles S. Peirce in red from 1 to 2038 and in blue from 2038 to 1 (i.e., red number 1 is blue number 2038). Included here are records of pendulum observations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, calculations, exploration of mathematical problems.

Identifier: (1106) Box 66

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-12.

General Note:

An attempt to define consciousness. Charles S. Peirce recognizes three meanings of the word (excluding the nonphilosophical usage which occurs when a person who comes out of a faint is said to have recovered consciousness). The three meanings reflect the three categories: feeling (Firstness), effort (Secondness), and thought (Thirdness). In regard to the second mode of consciousness, Charles S. Peirce distinguishes the active species from the passive (or degenerate) species.

General Note:

In these fragments Charles S. Peirce argues against Dr. Osler's jocose law (men ought to be put to death at 60), by citing as counterexamples the work of Galton, Kelvin, and Mme. Curie. One of the pages bears the title, A Brief Synopsis of C. S. Peirce's Principles of Philosophy. Apparently the first volume of the Principles was to have been a review of the leading ideas of the nineteenth century.

Published, in part, as 7.267n8. Introductory remarks on the principles that underlie this attempt to write a history of science. Charles S. Peirce relies on his independent opinion in several areas, but notes deficiencies in several others including classificatory physics (weakest spot), mineralogy, crystallography, and biology. Candid evaluation of his knowledge of other sciences, e.g., geology and linguistics. The remaining pages concern the Egyptians and their science. The pyramids and the hypotheses of Egyptologists; failure of Egyptian mathematicians to understand fractions (errors in calculation of areas and volumes); the general stupidity of the Egyptians.

Physical Description:

5 pp.

General Note:

Also with 1 p. of another draft.

Apparently an early draft of the introductory remarks to the twelve lectures delivered by Peirce on The History of Science at the Lowell Institute, 1892-93. Peirce mentions having published a memoir on the logic of relations 23 years ago. The date of this manuscript is, accordingly, c.1892.

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 101-128.

General Note:

Incomplete.

Presumably Lecture III of the Lowell Institute Lectures of 1892-93. Lecture II discussed the Great Pyramid. Herschel's theory accounting for the angles of slope of the entrances to the pyramid is a glorious example of bad reasoning. Lecture II seems to have closed with mention of Aahmes. Lecture III continues with some examples from Aahmes, stressing the awkwardness and stupidity of the way sums were done. Aahmes' knowledge of summation of a geometrical series. Brief comment on Egyptian chemistry and medicine.

Physical Description:

pp. 1-51.

General Note:

Presumably Lecture V or a draft of the fifth lecture of the Lowell Institute Lectures of 1892-93. Published, in part, as 7.267n8 (pp. 4-6). There is a reference to the preceding lecture, which concerned Chaldean astronomy. Further remarks on the Chaldees and their scientific superiority over the Egyptians. The Greek mind: sly, distrustful of induction, passion for unity. Thales and Pythagoras. Charles S. Peirce's criticism of Zeller's account of Pythagoras and the Pythagoreans. Cf. MS. 1275.

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-18.

General Note:

A fuller treatment of the experiments of Galileo than in MS. 1282. Charles S. Peirce ends with an emotional appeal that the treatment accorded Galileo not be repeated. Ah! Ladies and Gentlemen, it is a bitter thing to be put into the world by God to do a special great piece of work, to be hungering and thirsting to do it, and to be prevented by the jealousies and coldness of men. And: Do not fancy that the blocking of the wheels of progress is confined to by-gone times and to strange countries.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [The History of Science from Copernicus to Newton (1543-1686)] : autograph manuscript two notebooks, circa 1902

Identifier: (1287) Box 77

Date: Creation: circa 1902

Physical Description: 1 folder

General Note:

Both notebooks are headed Lecture I. In one (pp. 1-21), Charles S. Peirce notes that his primary interest is in the history of the doctrine of universal mechanical necessity. What follows is a discussion of the pyramids, providing, in the main, the same material as found in MS. 1269. The other notebook (dated August 1, pp. 1-29) seems to be an earlier draft of the notebook described above. The apparently later of the two notebooks is directly continued by part of MS. 1300.

M. Sciences of review

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [Adirondack Summer School Lectures] : autograph manuscript two notebooks

Identifier: (1334) Box 79

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

Two notebooks.

General Note:

Notebook I (pp. 1-48) published, in part, as 1.284 (pp. 35-36). Unpublished: the classification of both men and the sciences in terms of prattospude (discovery for the sake of doing), taxospude (discovery for the sake of applying knowledge), heurospude (discovery for the sake of discovery). The three divisions of heurospude or pure science become mathematics, philosophy, and idioscopy. The dependence of the special sciences on philosophy: Charles S. Peirce's disagreement with the empirical philosophers, e.g., Comte and his followers, who make philosophy dependent upon the special sciences. The principles of common sense are indubitable; it is impossible to be consistently dissatisfied with them. The normative sciences. Esthetics, or axiagastics, treats of the ultimate aim, or the sammum bonum. The relationship of ethics to esthetics. Ethics as the science of self-control has the double task of describing the operation of self-control (but not in psychological terms) and determining the conditions to which conduct must conform in order to be right. The second of the two tasks belongs to critical ethics which is distinguished from casuistry by reason of its avoidance of specific cases. Logic as an application of ethics to the realm of thought and as a science of signs. Logic is more than the theory of the relation of symbols to their object; it stands as the general theory of signs of all kinds. Notebook II (pp. 49-59): doctrine of signs (continued). The branches of logic: stecheology, logical critic, and methodeutic. Tritocenoscopia and taxospude.

Burks' category: G-1905-5.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. The Categories studied with reference to the English Language : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1335) Box 79

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

3 pp.

General Note:

Also with another 3 pp. of an outline for the general classification of the sciences.

The sciences are most successfully classified on the basis of their logical dependence upon each other and their degree of specialization. Mathematics is highest on the scale of generality.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Philosophy in the Light of the Logic of Relatives : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1336) Box 79

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-13.

General Note:

Unfinished.

Classification of the sciences. Some of the ways in which Charles S. Peirce's classification differs from Comte's. The relationship between metaphysics and logic, on the one hand, and between metaphysics and psychics, on the other.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. History of Science from Copernicus to Newton : autograph manuscript

Physical Description:

9 pp.

General Note:

Unfinished.

The classification of the sciences. The division of the sciences into physics and psychics.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. (Monist) : autograph manuscript, circa 1905-06

Identifier: (1338) Box 79

Date: Creation: circa 1905-06

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-41.

General Note:

Unfinished or incomplete, with pp. 18-19 missing and with fragments (possibly from another draft).

The entire manuscript, with the exception of some clearly marked pages concerned with Wundt on the versos, deals with the classification of the sciences. Charles S. Peirce sets out to clarify his Monist article of April 1905 (G-1905-1a).

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. A Suggested Classification of the Sciences : autograph manuscript, undated

Identifier: (1339) Box 79

Date: Creation: undated

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-13, 1-6.

General Note:

Some of the ways in which Charles S. Peirce's scheme differs from other schemes. Charles S. Peirce's point of departure is Comte. Division of science into its theoretical and practical parts Charles S. Peirce calls for criticism, especially from taxonomists

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-3.

General Note:

Also with 3 pp. of variants; pp. 2-3, with one discarded page, of another attempt.

Logic is a science. Before science can be characterized as serious inquiry (not systematized knowledge), several well-known facts must be digested, e.g., that we all have beliefs, that we are under a compulsion to believe what we do believe, etc.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. Of the Classification of the Sciences. Second Paper. Of the Practical Sciences (Classification of the Sci) : autograph manuscript

Identifier: (1343) Box 79

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

pp. 1-103.

General Note:

Unfinished; Also with 90 pp. of other drafts

Published, in part, in the following order: 7.53-57, 7.381n19, and 7.58 (pages 4-10, 21, 23, 75-76). Omitted: a discussion of different systems of classifying the sciences. Every natural classification is based on the purpose or quasi-purpose of the objects classified. Purpose has its root in desire. And every desire is a phase of instinct. A good classification of the instincts affords a key to purposes in general and to scientific purposes in particular. Elaborate classification of instincts

Charles S. Peirce presents the rules, general idea, and nomenclature of the game as well as the mathematics involved in actual play. In response to a letter of inquiry from Professor James Woods of the Harvard Philosophy Department, Julian Masan of The New York Evening Post reports (December 23; 1930) that the newspaper's backgammon experts agree that the mathematical parts of this manuscript have been worked out more thoroughly since Charles S. Peirce's time but that, for the period it was written, the ideas contained in it are quite remarkable.

Descriptions of two experiments involving use of a flywheel.

Peirce, Charles S. (Charles Sanders), 1839-1914. [On Political Economy] : autograph manuscript, September 21, 1874

Identifier: (1569) Box 87

Date: Creation: September 21, 1874

Physical Description: 1 folder

Physical Description:

8 pp.

General Note:

The facts of political economy fall within three categories involving the relations of price, demand, and cost of production. The first axiom of political economy: the desire of a person for anything has a quantity of one dimension, and a person having a choice will take that alternative which will give him the greatest satisfaction. The desirability of a thing depends on other things related to it either as alternatives or as coefficients Charles S. Peirce embarks on a logical treatment of political economy based on a set of propositions which are assumed. The list of propositions is incomplete and what follows by way of discussion is fragmentary.

Identifier: (1604) Box 115

Date: Creation: September 1894

Physical Description: 5 pages

Physical Description:

5 pp.

General Note:

In logic, Charles S. Peirce states that he has studied every important system except the second edition of Sigwart. But he is most devoted to the theory of knowledge and secondly to cosmology. Reading in esthetics, ethics, theology, and psychology. Plato read mainly in translation; Aristotle in the original. Have read and thought more about Aristotle than about any other man. (It is difficult to tell whether this remark was meant to apply generally, since it was made in the context of his discussion of Greek philosophy.) Indeed the manuscript doesn't get beyond Charles S. Peirce's reading in Greek philosophy, ending with Epicureanism and atomism.

Peirce's scientific journals; My writings on the Validity of Reasoning; notes on construction work at Arisbe; Octavo copies of my writings in the breakfast room; meanings of the verb give; To calculate the height of Aurora according to H. A. Newton. Some undated reflections: I like and esteem the man who knows when to resign a game of chess, and does not insist upon protracting it to a tedious and melancholy mate. I like and esteem the man who gives Death a cordial shake of the hand when the time comes, and having fought a good fight, does not finish it with a feeble, frittering, factious, fretful, futility. And: Intellectual value lies wholly in form, not matter.

General Note:

Duplicated, in part, in the appendix to T. A. Goudge's The Thought of C. S. Peirce and, in part, in the introduction to P. P. Wiener's edited anthology of Charles S. Peirce's writings, Valves in a Universe of Chance. Both Goudge and Wiener reprinted Charles S. Peirce's entry in the Harvard Class-Book of 1859, written at the time of his graduation. In the Book of Characters we have in addition Charles S. Peirce's entries for the years 1859-61: Wondered what I would do in life --- Appointed Aid on the Coast Survey (1859); Came back from Louisiana and took a Prostorship in Harvard. Studied Natural History and Natural Philosophy (1860); No longer wondered what I would do in life but defined my object (1861). Only the first 3 pp. are autobiographical. The balance of the notebook is given over to a financial record, covering a period of four months, most likely for the year 1863.
